The master who has defined of woman's worth has taken many forms throughout time. One of the most prevalent standard made for woman, has been the standard of men. But what we so often forget is that God has honored the women by giving her value in relation to Himself-not in relation to men. As a result the western feminism was forced to find her value in relation to a man. She had accepted that man is standard, and thus a woman can never be a full human being until she becomes just like a man: the standard.

When a man cut his hair short, she wanted to cut her hair short. When a man joined the army, she wanted to join the army. She wanted these things for no reason than because the „standard” had them. As soon as we accepted that everything a man has and does is better, all that followed was just a knee-jerk reaction; if men have it- we want it too. But we don't know that we have power that can be more than even men[16].

On the other hand only a woman can be a mother. Allah has given many privileges to the mother. Our prophet said that heaven is under the feet of mothers. But a man is deprived of such honor. Why is it not unfair then?

When Allah honors us with such a unique honor, we are busy imitating men. Fifty years ago, society told us that men were superior. Because they went out and earned money. We were mothers. Because even at that time, we realized that it is more important for our children to be kind, moral and well- educated than anything else[17]. Mothers were good at this.

Only today western women are choosing to stay at home and raise their children. According to the United States Department of Agriculture, 31 percent of mothers with babies and 18 percent of women with two or more children work full-time. That is why today there are fewer and fewer children trying to live with their parents in the grave and take care of them[18]. Because a person can not show love that was not given to him. And as a result, as the number of kindergartens increases, so does the number of nursing home[15].

But thankfully, we are Muslims, and our holy book, the Holy Qur'an, clearly and accurately defines who should perform or be able to perform what duties in the family. And as we mentioned, the difficult and responsible task of raising a child is assigned to mothers. They do it very well. That is why in many Muslim countries, children who respect their parents, educated and educated grow up[14]. They often choose to live with their parents and take care of them even after growing up. Because children enjoy mother's love from a young age. The fact that a child is good, polite, hardworking, and healthy depends to a large extent on his mother. According to the researches of scientists, the children who received mother's education and feel her care and compassion at every step devote themselves to public works, grow up healthy, smart, well-educated and cheerful[13]. The important task of a mother in raising a child is to show kindness to her children, protect them from various harms, feed them on time, wash them, dress them cleanly, and not allow them to catch a cold. . Every action of a mother in the family circle, every word that comes out of her mouth can have a positive or negative effect on her child's education and formation. Copying her every move, she takes a model of her mother's vocabulary for her unformed vocabulary[12].

Many research results consistently showed that children who have a close attachment to their parents develop into teenagers who have interesting personalities; high self-confidence, emotional intelligence, and high social skills and ability to solve problems effectively. Simpson et.al conducted a longitudinal study (measuring the attachment of mothers and children at the time of infancy and measured back by the time they reached adulthood), proved that the infant attachment experience had a relative effect permanent inability to form an attachment at later ages[11].

The UN Every Woman Every Child (EWEC) global movement has highlighted the tremendous returns that its “Global Strategy for Women’s, Children’s and Adolescents’ Health (2016-2030)” could yield by 2030, including: “At least a 10-fold return on investments through better educational attainments, workforce participation, and social contributions; At least US$100 billion in demographic dividends from investments in early childhood and adolescent health and development; A ‘grand convergence’ in health, giving all women, children and adolescents an equal chance to survive and thrive”.

There is also an economic rationale for providing support and care for mothers during pregnancy and early childhood. Research by the London School of Economics & Centre for Mental Health has established that providing support and care for mothers and babies during pregnancy and early childhood is five times more effective than later interventions designed to deal with individual or social problems in later life[10].

Mothers play a vital role in a child’s life, from providing emotional support and nurturing their growth and development to shaping their character and instilling values[9].

The importance of a strong maternal bond is highlighted, along with the responsibilities that come with being a mother.

Mothers also play a key role in teaching children how to cope with adversity. Through their own responses to challenges and through direct teaching, mothers influence how their children perceive and react to problems. For example, a mother who models problem-solving and maintains a positive attitude in the face of difficulties teaches her child resilience[8]. These lessons are integral to developing the ability to face and overcome their own challenges. By providing a consistent model of resilience and resourcefulness, mothers provide their children with the tools necessary to navigate life's inevitable challenges and opportunities[7].

The role of mothers in their children's development is unique and invaluable. As such, supporting mothers, honoring their efforts, and understanding their challenges are crucial steps in fostering a healthier, more emotionally aware generation[6].

To sum up, we should focus more on staying at home and raising our children than any career or any job. Because we know they are our future. If we, under the influence of the West, entrust our children to nannies or kindergartens as soon as they are born, I think that the number of old people's homes can increase. Any work can be restored. But if your child grows up in the care of others and causes a lot of problems in the future, I'm afraid there's no way to fix that.
